Great gifts for music lovers

A great way to find the right gift is to think of a loved one's hobbies and find something that fosters those passions. Many people love music, and if there happens to be a budding musician or someone who simply loves to rock on your list, then the following gifts may be music to their ears.

· Concert tickets: The ultimate gift for many music fans is tickets to see their favorite performer in person. Concert tickets can sell out quickly, so research when tickets will be going on sale and be prepared to purchase them as early as possible. Some credit card companies sponsor concerts and make special arrangements with venues to offer cardholders advanced deals or special packages. Find out if your credit card company has such an offer available for the concert you are buying tickets for.

· Digital gift card: Gone are the days when music fans visit a record store to purchase vinyl records, cassette tapes and even CDs. Many music fans now listen exclusively to digital music, so a gift card for digital downloads from Amazon or iTunes makes a great gift. A subscription to a music-streaming service also makes a great gift.

· Theater tickets: Some people's love of music stems from their love of live theater. Even if your loved one lives nowhere near the bright lights of Broadway, touring companies that perform popular Broadway shows visit cities both big and small across the country. Tickets to such shows can stoke your loved one's passion for music and make for a great night out on the town.

· Music lessons: Perhaps your loved one is a budding musician who can benefit from professional instruction? A great way to encourage their aspirations is to finance their lessons with local music or vocal instructors. Visit a nearby college or school for recommendations on local instructors. The franchise "School of Rock" has regional locations and offers musical training as well.

· Gift certificate: Musicians often need to repair or replace their instruments, so a gift card to a music store can make for a much-needed and appreciated gift. Repairs and new instruments can be expensive, so if you plan to go this route, put enough money on the card to make a significant dent at the register.

· Gadgets: Each year the market seems to offer newer and better ways to listen to music, and these gadgets may be on your loved one's wish list.

Connecting your kids and cell phones

From connecting with friends to playing interactive games, a mobile device presents endless entertainment to kids of every age. With children getting their first cell phone at a younger age than ever before, it's important to make sure they stay safe by investing in a kid-friendly phone and keeping tabs on their activity. From ensuring there is fun content to using new applications which limit their exposure to undesirable content, there are many considerations to take into account when purchasing a phone for your child.

As you begin researching options, consider this advice.

Durability. When it comes to kids, durability is key. Look for phones that can stand up to daily use and invest in protection (such as covers and screen protectors) to save it from drops or spills. Add a few simple investments and save big on repair or replacement costs down the line.

Security. Look for a device that creates a safe smartphone experience for your child as well as monitor their usage. The NQ Family Guardian parental control app allows you to monitor and manage your child's activities, locations and phone usage. Plus, it comes with access to special SpongeBob SquarePants content such as wallpapers and videos, so kids can have fun while still being safe.

Entertainment. Make sure the phone has the capability to download apps that provide plenty of quality entertainment. From games that inspire kids to draw pictures to puzzles and word games, your child will love the excitement at their fingertips.

Affordability. Seek a pre-paid or pay-as-you-go plan so you can manage the data your kids use, set limits on costs and avoid hidden fees that come with contract plans.
